Conclusion
Many of our Catholic people especially church workers have asked us to respond to the cries of powerlessness from the region called Appalachia. We have listened to these cries and now we lend our own voice. The cries come now from Appalachia, but they are echoed across the land across the earth in the suffering of too many people. Together these many sufferings form a single cry.

The Living God hears this cry and tells us, what long ago on a different mountain, was told the servant Moses that, God had heard the cry of a people. God would deliver them out of the hands of oppression. God would give them a rich and broad land.

But before we turn to this message from God, we must hear first the cry of Appalachia's poor. Their cry is a strong message, not because we have made it that way, but because the truth of Appalachia is harsh. In repeating this message we do not put ourselves in judgement of others. The truth of Appalachia is judgement upon us all, making hard demands on us bishops, as well as on others.

We know that there will be other opinions about the truth of Appalachia, other views than those of the poor. But we must remind ourselves that the poor are special in the eyes of God, for we have been told, in the voice of Mary,

God has pulled down princes from their thrones, and exalted the lowly.
The hungry have been filled with good things, the rich sent empty away. (Luke 1:52-53)

Even so, we know that our words are not perfect. For that reason, this letter is but one part of an unfinished conversation with our people with the truth of Appalachia with the Living God.

Yet we still dare to speak, and speak strongly, first, because we trust our people and we know that those who belong to Yahweh truly wish to do God's will; and second, because we believe that the cry of the poor is also a message of hope, a promise from Jesus, that there can be a better way, for Jesus has told us,

The Truth will make you free. (John 8:32)
Part I: The land and its people

Appalachia makes us think of people who live in the hills, who love nature's freedom and beauty, who are alive with song and poetry. But many of these people are also poor and suffer oppression.

Once they went to the mountains fighting to build a dream different from the injustice they knew before. Until this day, their struggle continues, a bitter fight whose sound still rumbles across the hills.

Yes, the poor of the mountains have been wounded, but they are not crushed.

The Spirit still lives. The sound of music still ripples through the hills. Continually the tears of song burn in outrage, and outrage lives in struggle.

But the hillfolk of the mountains are not the only ones who struggle.

Besides the struggle in hollows, typical of the central region, there are struggles in industrial centers, grown grey with smoke and smog, blaring with the clank and crash of heavy machinery and urban congestion, where working people, and those who wish there was work, white and black, native and immigrant, speakers of one and many languages, battle for dignity and security, for themselves and for their children.

So too there is the struggle in farmland, typical of rolling hills in the southern sector, where little farmers and sharecroppers, day laborers and migrant workers, who help the earth yield its food to the hungry, battle for that same dignity and security, for themselves and their children.

In all three areas - the center - the north - the south

In every labor - the mine - the factory - the farm

the struggle is different, yet remains the same.

It is at once the struggle - of all Appalachia - of the whole nation - of the human family.

The Appalachian mountains form the spiny backbone of the Eastern United States. This whole stretch, which the Federal Government calls "The Appalachian Region", runs from Southern New York to Northern Georgia and Alabama. It contains 397 counties in 13 states, parts of - Alabama, - Georgia, - Kentucky, - Maryland, - Mississippi, - New York, - North Carolina, - Ohio, - Pennsylvania, - South Carolina, - Tennessee, - Virginia, and all of West Virginia.
In the region there are:
mountain folk,
city folk,
country folk,
coal miners and steel workers,
union workers and non-union workers,
industrial workers and service workers,
farmers and farm laborers,
housewives and children,
teachers and health workers,
ministers and rabbis and priests,
artists and poets,
professionals and technicians,
lawyers and politicians,
lobbyists and interest groups,
executives and managers,
little business people and big business people,
coal companies and chemical companies,
industrialists and bankers.

Many of these kings
don't live in the region.

A long time ago in this country
when big industry just got started,
Appalachian coal played a big role.
It fed the furnaces
of our first industrial giants,
like Pittsburgh and Buffalo.
The coal-based industry
created many jobs,
and brought great progress to our country,
but it brought other things, too,
among them
oppression for the mountains.

So, you see,
Appalachia is not a simple place.
There are rich and poor,
big and little,
new and old,
and lots in between.

Soon the mountain people were dependent on the coal companies and on the company towns
that came with them.

But somehow,
no matter how confusing it seems,
it's all tied together
by the mountain chain
and by the coal in its Center,
producing energy within it.

An old song sings,
Another day older
and deeper in debt.
That was life for many people who lived in the shadow of the mountain's coal.

Of course,
there is more than coal
in the region.
There is
gas,
timber,
oil,
farms,
steel mills,
cheap labor,
but coal is central. Coal

Many of our Catholic people lived under this suffering
- in the coal mines,
- in the steel mills,
- in the other harsh jobs
that surrounded coal and steel.

Then came the unions,
as men and women fought hard
to change their lot.
The unions did good work
and for that reason
they were bitterly attacked
by enemies of justice.

But seeds of injustice
were also sown
within the labor movement.

There is a saying in the region
that coal is king.
That's not exactly right.
The kings are those who control big coal,
and the profit and power
which come with it.
Sometimes criminal forces entered to crush their democratic structure, or to use one union base to prevent union growth in other areas, or to turn contracts into documents of deceit, both for labor and management, thus encouraging their breach from both sides.

Sometimes workers allowed themselves to be used for selfish ends, like keeping out blacks, or women, or Indians, or Spanish-speaking people. Sometimes the labor movement thought only of workers in the U.S. and did not take seriously, their membership in the global human family.

Sometimes, too, they used the unions to protect the relative advantages of a few workers and little concern for the great disadvantage of the many.

The real power of the labor movement, a power which has not been totally crushed, is the vision that an injury to one is an injury to all, whether to white or black, whether to male or female, whether to worker or consumer, whether to union member or non-member, whether to U.S. citizen or to citizen of any nation.

But later on for many people, whose lives were tied to coal, the unions didn't matter so much any more. Coal gave way to oil, and a different suffering came across the mountains.

The mines in the hills began to close. The industrial thunder of cities near the mines weakened. The people from the mountains fled to the cities looking for jobs. But in the cities the jobs were few. It is a strange system which makes people suffer both when they have work and when they don't have work.

The Wider Picture

The people had to fight one another for the few jobs:
- mountain people against city people,
- white people against black people,
- Irish people against Polish and Italian people,
- skilled workers against unskilled workers,
- union workers against non-union workers.

As the people were forced to fight over jobs, self-defense became a way of life,
- in wars,
- in sports,
- in movies,
- even sometimes at home.

Our country meanwhile grew strong and powerful because of
- exploding war-stimulated technology,
- cheap raw materials from abroad,
- lots of oil,
- and a large work force.

But many people stayed poor, and suffered attacks on their dignity, especially
- Native Americans,
- Blacks,
- Mexican Americans,
- immigrants,
- Puerto Ricans,
- and poor whites, like Appalachians.

Brothers and sisters in suffering, these people were often forced to turn against one another, for some meager piece of a pie, which, however big (the biggest the world had ever known), refused to feed all its children.
As industrial production grew, it brought blessings to the human family, but the more it grew the more some felt it became like a cancer eating away its own foundation.

The system produced for production's sake, and it tried to train people to consume for consumption's sake. The ever growing production and consumption needed ever more energy, more than domestic gas and domestic oil can supply.

When foreign oil producing nations suddenly became more demanding on the world market, giant U.S. business interests (who before used to decide prices of things like oil on the world market) got frightened. They began to plan for U.S. "energy independence". One way to do that was to go back to a half dead and forgotten past, to coal.

Back to the Mountains

So the corporate giants turn their eyes to the mountains once again. Slowly, but powerfully, their presence rumbles in the heavy trod of the powerful among the powerful, those who control: - finance and credit, - information systems, - and energy resources.

Already voices from this camp have spoken of Appalachia as an "energy reservation", or "giant industrial park".

Appalachia, a field of powerlessness, may soon become the seat of economic power in the United States.

But the new power, which a return to coal could bring to Appalachia, would probably not make its people any more powerful. Instead, they would live a different kind of powerlessness, one common to the rest of our society the powerlessness of isolated little people in the face of the most powerful corporate giants on this earth.

The Worship Of An Idol

The way of life which these corporate giants create is called by some "technological rationalization". Its forces contain the promise of a world where - poverty is eliminated, - health is cared for, - education is available for all, - dignity is guaranteed, - and old age is secure. Too often, however, its forces become perverted, hostile to the dignity of the earth and of its people.

Its destructive growth patterns - pollute the air, - foul the water, - rape the land.

The driving force behind this perversion is "Maximization of Profit", a principle which too often converts itself into an idolatrous power.
This power overwhelms the good intentions of noble people. It forces them to compete brutally with one another. It pushes people into "conspicuous consumption" and "planned obsolescence." It delivers up control to a tiny minority whose values then shape our social structures.

Of course, technological rationalization and the profit principle have served important functions in human development. It is not they themselves that form an idol, but the idol is formed when they become absolutes and fail to yield, when the time has come, to other principles.

Neither do we believe that our people, or the people of the nation, have totally fallen prey to the power of this idol. But even without that happening, "Maximization of profit" in today's world, has become a crazy death wish, every day using up more and more of the earth's riches and our own dignity. Like those who write spy thrillers, its process is fascinated with everything that can "self-destruct", even if it is ourselves.

Without judging anyone, it has become clear to us that the present economic order does not care for its people. In fact, profit and people frequently are contradictory. Profit over people is an idol. And it is not a new idol, for Jesus long ago warned us,

No one can be the slave of two slave-drivers; the first will be hated and the second loved, or the first treated with respect, and the second with scorn. You cannot be the slave both of God and money. (Matthew 6:24)

This is not a problem only for mountain folk; it is everybody's problem.

Appalachia As A Symbol

In a country whose productive force is greater than anything the world has ever known, the destructive idol shows its ugly face in places like Appalachia.

The suffering of Appalachia's poor is a symbol of so much other suffering - in our land, - in our world.

It is also a symbol of the suffering which awaits the majority of plain people in our society - if they are laid off, - if major illness occurs, - if a wage earner dies, - or if anything else goes wrong.

In this land of ours, jobs are often scarce. Too many people are forced to accept unjust conditions or else lose their jobs.

Human services for the poor, and for the almost poor, are inadequate. Safety standards are often too weak or ignored. Workers are injured unnecessarily.
Legal and medical recourse for claims against occupational injury or occupational disease are often too difficult or unavailable. Sometimes those who should be helping people in their claims seem to stand in the way. Black Lung and mine accidents are the most famous examples, but not the only ones.

On the other hand, powerful reform movements are underway-
- in the union movement,
- in community organizing,
- in the consumer movement,
- in public interest lobbies,
- in religious circles.

To these must be added even forces from within the business community:
- managerial personnel who are concerned not only with salaries and promotion, but also with the contribution of the economic order to social well being, particularly the bringing of jobs to poor areas;
- small and medium size business people, who wish to operate justly, but who struggle under the pressure of giant economic competitors ruthlessly trying to wipe them out;
- stockholders who rebel against the impersonal structure of ownership and try to make their voices felt for justice within large corporations.

Together these groups struggle to achieve what must become the foundation principle of our common life, namely citizen involvement-
- in our productive base,
- in our political institutions,
- in our cultural life.

The main task for such citizen involvement will be to build social structures which provide full employment and decent wages for all people.

Despite abuses, we feel that a strong and broad labor movement is basic, one which can stabilize the labor market North and South, East and West, and prevent groups from playing off different sectors of working people against each other. Even so, these movements are just beginning and reach too few people.

We know also that as they grow stronger, they will be attacked; that other forces will try to crush them.

Unaccountable economic powers will continue to use democratic political institutions for non-democratic purposes. Sometimes this shows itself brutally, when officers of the law act like company enforcers. At other times, it's more complicated when lawyers and legislators seem to get paid to keep the people confused, and to find loop-holes for the benefit of the rich.
These same massive economic forces, still accountable to no one, will even use vehicles of our cultural life, like communications media and advertising, and even the educational system, to justify their ways, and to pass their values as our national values. This happens when news that's important to people can't get time or space, or when school programs are designed by experts without incorporating the voice of the people.

We know that there are many - sincere business people, - zealous reporters, - truthful teachers, - honest law enforcement officers, - dedicated public officials, - hard working lawyers and legislators who try to do a good job. But we know too that, the way things are set up, it's hard for good people to do a good job.

It's strange, for instance, that despite earlier reforms, a country which took such richness from Appalachia left so little for the people. Great fortunes were built on the exploitation of Appalachian workers and Appalachian resources; yet the land was left without revenues to care for its social needs, like - education, - welfare, - old age, - and illness.

Some may say, "That's economics", but we say that economics is made by people. Its principles don't fall down from the sky and remain for all eternity. Those who claim they are prisoners of the laws of economics only testify that they are prisoners of the idol.

The same thing which is so obvious in Appalachia goes on outside the mountains. Plain people work hard all their life, and their parents worked hard before them, yet they can't make ends meet. - Food is too expensive. - Taxes are too high for most. (Too low for the rich.) - Sickness puts people into debt. - College is out of reach for their children. - Paychecks keep shrinking. And it's worse still for those who can't work, especially the elderly.

Meanwhile, corporate profits for the giant conglomerates, who control our energy resources, keep on skyrocketing.

But now there is some promise of fresh "economic development" in the Appalachian region, at least if our industry returns to a substantial coal base.

From the rest of the world, however, we know now, after hard experiences, that "development" often brings little to the poor or to the workers; often the reverse. Yet even if it were to bring prosperity, there is a question we must ask about the new energy resources.

It is, "How will we use our energy?" as well as, "Where will we get it from?"
If our present system keeps on growing and growing, it will burn up us and our world. The present pattern of energy use, a great deal of which goes for military production or else for the production of discardable junk, is barbaric.

This nation, containing about 6 percent of the earth's population, consumes over one-third of the earth's energy and causes 40 percent of the earth's industrial pollution. But even that doesn't tell the whole truth, because, at least by 1962 figures, 1.6 percent of the population of this country owned 80 percent of the corporate wealth, so that averages or per capita statistics really mislead us about the ordinary people's situation. Some talk about a population problem among the poor. There's an even bigger consumption problem among the rich consumption not just of luxuries, but of power, of the power to shape - economic structures, - political structures, - cultural structures all in the service of - more waste, - more profit, - more power. Even worse, U.S. energy consumption is expected to double in the next decade. What kind of a world would it be, where "Maximization of Profit" destroys life for so many today, and for future generations?

Ironically, most people in this country are not satisfied with the consumer society. It makes life a rat race, where nobody feels they belong, where all are pushed around, where roots disappear.

With so much busy-ness and clutter of things, - things that don't work, - things you have to keep fixing, - no time to play or sing like folks used to. We get lost in our busy-ness and grow to hate and abuse all our things.

Worse still, swallowing us up in things is the power of the idol which eats away at our openness to the Living God.

But the children of the mountains have fought for a different way. Their struggles and their poetry together keep alive - a dream, - a tradition, - a longing, - a promise which is not just their dream, but the voiceless vision buried beneath life's bitterness wherever it is found.

They sing of a life free and simple, with time for one another, and for people's needs, based on the dignity of the human person, at one with nature's beauty, crowned by poetry. If that dream dies, all our struggles die with it.

Defending The Struggle's Dream

Many times before, outside forces have attacked the mountain's dream. But never before was the attack so strong. Now it comes with - cable TV, - satellite communications, - giant ribbons of highway driving into the guts of the land.
The attack wants to teach people that happiness is what you buy
- soaps and drinks,
- in gimmicks and gadgets,
and that all of life
is one big commodity market.

It would be bad enough
if the attack only tried to take the land,
but it wants the soul, too.
When it has its way,
the poet is silent.
Instead comes
noisy blare and din,
the chatter of a language
empty of meaning,
but filled with violence.

This struggle of resistance is a struggle against violence -- against institutional violence
which sometimes subtly,
sometimes brutally,
attacks human dignity and life.

Therefore,
although the Catholic tradition
fully acknowledges the legitimacy
of self-defense and force
as the final recourse
against injustice,
we must beware of the temptation
of a too easy violence -- of a bitterness which can poison
that for which we struggle, or which
still worse,
can provoke from forces of injustice
an even more brutal and repressive institutional violence
whose first victim
is always the poor.

It is the mountain's spirit of resistance
which must be defended
at any cost,
for at stake is the spirit
of all our humanity.
There are too few spaces of soul
left in our lives.

Once we all
- knew how to dance and sing,
- sat in mystery before the poet's spell,
- felt our hearts rise to nature's cathedral.
Now an alien culture
battles to shape us
into plastic forms empty of Spirit,
into beasts of burden
without mystery.

If the struggle's dream can be defended,
and we believe it can,
then perhaps the great instruments of attack,
- cable TV,
- satellite communications,
- ribbons of highway,
can become like so many arms,
which instead of crushing life,
reach out to make it fuller,
to bring to others
beyond the mountains,
the promise of their vision.
Part II: The answer of Jesus & his church

The God of the Poor

The living God,
the Lord whom we worship,
is the God of the poor.

In Israel,
God's very self was revealed to a people
in their liberation from oppression
under the bondage of Egypt:
I have seen the miserable state
of my people in Egypt.
I have heard their appeal to be free
of their slave-drivers . . .
I mean to deliver them
out of the hands of the Egyptians . . .
And now the cry of the children of Israel
has come to me.
That day, Yahweh rescued Israel
from the Egyptians . . .
and the people venerated Yahweh . . . (Exodus 3:7-9,30-31)

Not only in the liberation of a people is God revealed
as the Living God,
but also within Israel
by defending all those who are victims of injustice.

God will free the people who call out,
and those who need help,
God will have pity on the poor and feeble . . .
God will redeem their lives
from exploitation and outrage. (Psalms 72:12-14)

Thus, the God of Israel,
who is also our God,
is the God of the poor,
because he frees the oppressed.

The Messiah & His Reign

But Israel's mission
was to the whole world,
not just to its own nation.
As injustice against Israel and throughout the world
seemed to mount higher,
Yahweh promised to send a liberator.
This one was to be a great leader,
whose reign would bring justice.
For this Messiah
Israel prayed:

God, give judgement to your Anointed,
to those who follow your justice,
that your people may be judged in justice
and your poor in right judgement.
May the mountains bring forth
peace for the people and the hills, justice.
May your Anointed defend
the poor of the people,
save the children of the needy,
and crush the oppressor. (Psalm 72:1-4,12-13)

And there came among us,
a man from Israel,
whom we confess to be God-with-us,
the messiah long promised.  And when he rose up to speak in his native Nazareth,
he chose the words
from the prophet Isaiah:

The Spirit of God has been given to me,
for Yahweh has anointed me.
God has sent me to bring the good news to the poor,
to proclaim liberty to captives
and to the blind new sight,
to set the downtrodden free,
to proclaim Yahweh's year of favor. (Luke 4:18-19)

And when, like Moses of old,
this Jesus climbed a mount
to tell the people his Father's law,
he left no doubt
that he was indeed
the messiah of the poor:

How happy are you who are poor:
yours is the kingdom of God.
Happy you who are hungry now:
you shall be satisfied.
Happy you who weep now:
you shall laugh . . .
But alas for you who are rich:
you are having your consolation now.
Alas for you who have your fill now:
you shall go hungry.
Alas for you who laugh now:
you shall mourn and weep. (Luke 6:21,24-25)

The Messiah, the Creator and their Spirit
are the Living God.
They are different from the dead idols
which clutter history,
because they,
and not the idols,
act for justice.
The dead idols prove to be gods of oppression.

I am Yahweh your God who brought you
out of the land of Egypt,
out of the land of slavery.
You shall have no gods except me. (Exodus 20:1-3)

The choice between the Living God
and inert idols
is not only a choice between justice
and injustice;
it is also a choice
between life
and death.

Today,
I set before you life or death,
blessings or curse.
Choose life, then,
so that you and your descendants may live,
in the love of Yahweh your God,
obeying God's voice,
clinging to God;
for in this your life consists,
and on this depends your long stay in the land which Yahweh
sware to your ancestors . . . (Deuteronomy 30:19-20)

The Church's Mission

Out of faith in the risen Jesus
a new community of people is born, skeking to be united
in one mind and spirit
with him.

Upon this community
Jesus pours forth his Spirit,
the Spirit of truth,
who teaches us everything
and reminds us of all he said to us.

The whole group of believers was united,
heart and soul;
o no one claimed for personal use
anything that was owned,
as everything they had was held in common . . .
None of their members was ever in want,
as all those who owned land or houses
would sell them,
and bring the money for them,
to present it to the apostles; it was then distributed to any members who might be in need. (Acts 4:32-35)

Still the church
is not perfect.
Its early bishop James
had to remind the people:

. . . it was those who are poor
according to the world that Yahweh chose, to be rich in faith
and to be heirs to all that was promised to those who love God.

In spite of this,
you have no respect for anybody who is poor.
Isn't it always the rich who are against you?
Isn't it always their doing
when you are dragged before the court?
Aren't they the ones who insult the honorable name to which you have been dedicated? (James 2:5-7)

Yet the church continues, despite its sins,
working for the poor,
insisting on practical love,
and not just prayers
and good intentions:

In this way we distinguish the children of God
from the children of the devil . . .
we are to love one another,
not to be like Cain
who cut his brother's throat . . .
If you refuse to love, you must remain dead; to hate your brother or sister is to be a murderer . . . This has taught us love that Jesus gave up his life for us; and we, too, ought to give up our lives for our brothers and sisters.

If those who were rich enough in this world's goods saw that a sister or brother was in need, but closed their hearts, how could the love of God be living in them?

My children, our love is not to be just words or mere talk, but something real and active; only by this can we be certain that we are children of the truth . . . (1 John 3:10-12, 15-19)

Through the ages, the church tries to be faithful to this message. At times it begins to stray from it, but always the Spirit is alive within it, stirring up new voices to call it back to its mission for Justice.

The Church's Social Teaching

For a long time now, our Church has been restless with what many call "The Modern World". There is much in this modern world which is good and beautiful: the sense of freedom, the progress of science and technology, the personal creativity unleashed from under stifling traditions, the growing unity of the human family.

God has challenged us to take up as holy whatever is good and beautiful in the modern world as in all of creation.

But has also challenged us to resist what is evil, especially injustice.

Since the industrial age, we have been active, speaking and acting on behalf of the casualties of the new economic spirit.

At the end of the last Century, Pope Leo XIII, wrote a great letter, On the Condition of the Working Classes (Rerum Novarum, Leo XIII)

Our own past brother, Archbishop Gibbons of Baltimore, made a great plea that this letter reflect the views of the common people. He told the pope, To lose the heart of the people would be a misfortune for which the friendship of the few rich and powerful would be no compensation.

In the wake of Leo's letter, as the destructiveness of the new economic order continued unchecked, the U.S. Catholic bishops felt compelled themselves to draft a letter to their people on the question of social reconstruction. While acknowledging that the American people were not ready for major reconstruction, and that the present industrial system is destined to last for a long time . . .

the bishops condemned three grievous abuses: enormous inefficiency and waste in the production and distribution of commodities; insufficient incomes for the great majority of wage earners; and unnecessarily large incomes for a small minority of privileged capitalists.

Further, they argued for an industrialism based on cooperation rather than on competition: The majority must somehow become owners, or at least in part, of the instruments of production.
Finally, in discussing remedies, they laid down the following principle:

... human beings cannot be trusted with the immense opportunities for oppression and extortion that go with the possession of monopoly power.

Still the injustices continued, so much so that Pope Pius XI felt obliged to publish another letter, forty years after Leo's letter, On Reconstructing the Social Order and Perfecting It Comfortably to the Precepts of the Gospel.

Pius XI pointed out that, in our days not alone is wealth accumulated, but immense power and despotic economic domination is concentrated in the hands of a few... This concentration of power has led to a threefold struggle for domination. First, ... the struggle for dictatorship in the economic sphere itself; then, the fierce battle to acquire control of the state, so that its resources and authority may be abused in the economic struggles; finally, the clash between states themselves.

The Catholic bishops of the United States again responded with their own letter, The Church and Social Order, in 1940. They lamented that an unjust society had caused many working people to become alienated from religion and to have lost faith and hope. Reminding economic powers that the earth is God's and the fullness thereof, (Psalm 23:1) they especially denounced concentration of ownership and control, the anonymous character of economic interests.

The social system at that time, at the end of the great depression, was generating great economic insecurity for many people. The bishops judged then that, an important factor making for insecurity is the immense power and despotic domination which is concentrated in the hands of those few who frequently are not the owners, but only the trustees and directors of invested funds.

They single out one group in this attack: Those who, because they hold and control money, are able also to govern credit and determine its allotment, for that reason supplying, so to speak, the life-blood to the entire economy, and grasping as it were in their hands the very soul of production.

They called for a more just social order, where property would be broadly distributed and people would be truly responsible for one another.

Now, close to our own day, the popes have continued to speak on the social question. Many will remember the warm letters of Pope John XXIII, Peace On Earth (Pacem in Teris) and Mother And Teacher (Mater et Magistra), and Pope Paul's letters On The Development Of Peoples (Populorum Progressio) and A Call To Action. In a more contemporary context, with a view to the poor across the globe, the popes have called us back to the message of Jesus and to Yahweh, the God of Justice.

We bishops have not been silent either. At the Vatican Council we spoke strongly for justice and the poor in The Pastoral Constitution On The Church In The Modern World "The joys and the hopes, the griefs and the anxieties... of this age, especially those who are poor or in any way afflicted."
And finally, when we gathered in Synod with all our fellow bishops of the world, scrutinizing the signs of the times and listening to the Word of God, we were "able to perceive the serious injustices which are building around the world a network of domination, oppression, and abuse . . ."

But we also noted "A new awareness which shakes (people) out of any fatalistic resignation and which spurs them on to liberate themselves . . . Action on behalf of justice and participation in the transformation of the world fully appear to us as a constitutive dimension of the preaching of the Gospel, or, in other words, of the Church's mission for the redemption of the human race and its liberation from every oppressive situation.

Thus, there must be no doubt, that we, who must speak the message of God who summoned Moses, and whose mouth was opened in Jesus of Nazareth, and who keeps the Spirit alive on behalf of justice for so many centuries, can only become advocates of the poor.

This is not to be simplistic, to see all in black and white, to be ignorant of economics and the contributions of other human sciences, but in a profound sense the choices are simple and stark: - death or life; - injustice or justice; - idolatry or the Living God.

We must choose life. We must choose justice. We must choose the Living God.
PART III: Facing the future

A Process of Dialogue And Testing

More and more people recognize that a new social order is being born. Indeed, the Spirit of God presses us to this recognition. We do not understand it all, but we know we are part of it, - in Appalachia, - in our nation, - across the world.

In what follows, we hope to give some guidance to our Catholic people for sharing in that birth struggle.

We have no easy answers, so this is but a first step. It must not be the last step. Hopefully, this letter, itself a product of dialogue, will start a process, wherein the Catholic community can join together with people of good will throughout the region to reflect on and act for a more just society.

While we have no answers, we have some principles to guide the process. Our searching must carefully balance the following three elements: closeness to the people; careful use of scientific resources; a steeping in the presence of the Spirit.

In regard to the first element, we must continually take time and invest creativity into listening to our people, especially the poor. For it is they who, out of their frustrations, dreams, and struggles, must lead the way for all of us.

Next we must listen to the vast majority of plain people who would not be called poor, but who are not rich, and who increasingly share in the powerlessness of the poor. Finally, strange as it may seem, we must also challenge the rich. For although Jesus himself has told us that it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle, than for the rich to enter heaven, (Matthew 19:24) and although one rich young man went away sad, for he was a man of great wealth, (Luke 19:22) there is also the story of Zacchaeus who accepted the demands of justice, who returned his property to the poor and paid back four fold whatever was stolen.

That day salvation came to his house, The Messiah has come to seek out and save what was lost. (Luke 19:10)

Throughout this whole process of listening to the people, the goal which underlies our concern is fundamental in the justice struggle, namely, citizen control, or community control. The people themselves must shape their own destiny. Despite the theme of powerlessness, we know that Appalachia is already rich here in the cooperative power of its own people.
In regard to the second element, we must be careful with science, because scientific models are not value free. So much of science has been used, in the contemporary world, to oppress rather than liberate, but science is not itself evil. Rather it is our task to take it up, and to infuse it with wisdom and humility, in the service of justice.

In regard to the third, we note with joy to renewed zeal for the presence of the Spirit in prayer and meditation among our Catholic people. We know that if this renewed presence can mature into a convergence with the thirst for justice, a new Pentecost will truly be upon us.

To begin this process of dialogue and testing we invite the Catholic Committee of Appalachia to draft for us and with us, as well as for and with all people of good will, a comprehensive plan of action. Together we may begin to test it throughout the region. This plan would constitute our first tool which, hopefully, each year could be brought up to date, in the light of fresh experience.

There are several specific points which now we would like to recommend for inclusion in the action plan.

First, and most important, in accord with our recommendation from the Synod document, Justice in the World, we would like to commend where they exist and recommend where they do not, Centers of Reflection and Prayer, in the service of action, throughout the region.

Such centers could integrate the analytical social science skills and the profound spirituality necessary for persevering creativity in the struggle for justice. They could also link fragmented struggles from different parts of the region, and even outside the region, thus supporting healthy localism with the richness of a wider national and international network.

In addition, we would like to know in what way the Church might cooperate with other major institutions of the region, provided they are open to the voice of the poor. Especially we welcome the opportunity to share with university people, people skilled in economic life, artists and poets, government people.

Also, as suggested by the letter of Paul VI, A Call to Action, we commend where they exist, and recommend where they do not, Centers of Popular Culture, in every parish, or in areas where there are no parishes, as a sign of the Church's concern, linked to the broader action centers, places where the poor feel welcome, spaces for people to come and share at all levels, so that if a new society is to be born, it will emerge from the grass roots.
Especially we stress
emphasis on the economic questions, for these are the first and most basic questions for all people.
We call attention
to the presence of powerful multinational corporations
now within our region.
The fate and role of these institutions
is a major question
not only for Appalachia,
but for the whole world.
Pope Paul VI has warned us that,
The multinational enterprises . . .
largely independent of the national political powers
and therefore not subject to control from the viewpoint of the common good . . .
can lead to a new and abusive form of economic domination of the social, cultural,
and even political level.
The excessive concentration of means and powers that Pope Pius XI already condemned
on the fortieth anniversary of Rerum Novarum is taking on a new and very real image.

As a counter-force
to the unaccountable power
of these multinational corporations, there must arise a corresponding multinational labor movement,
rooted in a vision of justice,
rising above corruption
and narrowness,
with a universal concern
- for all workers,
- for all consumers,
- for all people.

We are happy to note that some voices at least
are raising up such a vision
within the ranks of labor.

Finally,
there are a number of issues
which we hope the Committee will take up in its investigations.
We simply list them here,
knowing that there may be many more:
- role of coal in the life of the region & nation;
- energy consumption patterns and lifestyle;
- strip mining and deep mining;
- land acquisition;
- retribution and redistribution;
- tourism and recreation industries;
- exploitation of cheap labor;
- occupational health and safety;
- union reform and extension;
- community unions;
- community organizing and citizen control;
- public voice in local, state and national politics;
- church investments as seed money;
- cooperatives;
- education;
- health systems;
- family life;
- the elderly;
- arts and crafts;
- music and poetry;
- prayer.
Conclusion

As this letter closes, sisters and brothers, we wish you and all people throughout the region the gift of peace in Jesus. We know that all those who love Jesus will struggle to follow his path, no matter how confusing that may be during these times.

We ask you to weigh seriously with the Spirit the matters we have put before you, - in your own silence; - in your families; - in your work; - in your parishes.

We ask you to share in dialogue and testing with the leaders of your local church and with us bishops what we have presented here. There will be different views, but let us test them together - with the people, - with one another, - and with the Spirit.

We wish to thank the many Spirit-filled and dedicated people of our Church, who all along have been struggling in hidden or dramatic ways, for justice and unity among people. We thank the youth who have not given up hope, and who continue to believe in freshness in human experience. We thank parents, whose lives have been such that our youth have reason to hope. We thank the elderly, who despite great hardship, continue to survive with spirit and grace, and whose quiet wisdom inspires us all.

We thank the volunteers, not of this region, the countless sisters and brothers, priests and lay people, who have come to work at our side.

We especially thank women in the region, for we cannot but note the great role women have played here in the struggle for justice. In the contemporary mission of the Church, the voice and action of women bring a special charism to the struggle for justice.

Dear sisters and brothers, we urge all of you not to stop living, to be a part of the rebirth of utopias, to recover and defend the struggling dream of Appalachia itself. For it is the weak things of this world which seem like folly, that the Spirit takes up and makes its own. The dream of the mountains' struggle, the dream of simplicity and of justice, like so many other repressed visions is, we believe, the voice of Yahweh among us.

In taking them up, hopefully the Church might once again be known as - a center of the Spirit, - a place where poetry dares to speak, - where the song reigns unchallenged, - where art flourishes, - where nature is welcome, - where little people and little needs come first, - where justice speaks loudly, - where in a wilderness of idolatrous destruction the great voice of God still cries out for Life.
